Avocado Festival and more

After the Mother & Daughter Tea, we drove home to change and then we went to the La Habra Heights Avocado Festival. Savannah wanted to stay and play at her friend Madeline's house and Madeline's sister, Analiese, wanted to come with us to the Festival. We sort of did a kid swap thing...LOL!

We saw so many cute little animals, watched a weaver make homemade wool, petted little critters. We visited a Dog Greyhound rescue booth. I am going to have her be a guest speaker this summer for our La Habra Moms club and she will bring the dogs for the kids to meet and pet.

We then went over to the Bee Keeper. That was so neat! They had a live exhibit of bees in a bee hive making honey. I purchased some honey sticks filled with different flavored honeys. They girls LOVED them. I am going to ask Lynne the Bee Keeper to be a guest speaker this summer for La Habra Moms club also. I referred the Bee Keeper to the school principal, Kim Likert, at Savannah's school. She really liked the idea and they are going to incorporate an event next year at school. How cool is that?

Then we went over to the bouncy houses and the girls spent what seemed to be forever having a blast there. Afterwards we did a little shopping and I got the girls beautiful butterflies.

It was a fun day...and tiring too!!
