Fun stuff...

Yesterday I baked a bundt cake with a cream cheese coconut center. Today I frosted it and decorated it. It came out really cute. This is for today's cake walk at the Spring Fling Carnival at Savannah's school. I also brought in cupcakes too.

Savannah had to get to school early today, at 8:00am. Today is her field trip at Centennial Farms. I didn't win the drawing, but 2 mothers that do a ton of volunteering in the Kindy classroom won and I feel that they really deserved it. Savannah was excited to go on the big yellow school bus.

We had a rough start getting her ready for school though. Savannah was all dressed and I have her a cup of milk to drink with breakfast. Amanda had accidentally bumped her cup, causing the milk to spill all over Savannah's outfit that she had picked out the night before to wear to the farm today. Let's just say it didn't go down well this morning. Anyway, with a lot of disagreements, I finally got Savannah to wear something else. We hightailed it to school. I made her a special cheeseburger with Dorito chips and a juice box in a brown bag for her lunch today. She loves her cheeseburgers. I watched as she proudly marched with all of the other Kindy kids to the school bus. They were all wearing cute blue sun visors given to them for their field trip. She stepped up into the bus. In my heart these steps were huge...steps from my little girl growing into a big girl. I had a little tear at the corner of my eye...((sigh))

I purchased wrist bracelets for the girls to use for unlimited access to game booths and jumpy houses. It should be a lot of fun!!
