

Categories: Mom's Corner

Guess what I got today?

Have you ever heard of those Edible Arrangements? I received one today for our 11th wedding anniversary which will be tomorrow. Cliff's work sent it to me. Cliff has been working out of state in Arkansas for over 5 weeks now. He had been missed by all of us and his work wanted to show their appreciation for Cliff's hard work by sending this fruit arrangement. It is very beautiful and the girls devoured the grapes, strawberries and I let them try the chocolate covered fruit too.

What a nice and thoughtful thing his work did. Now I wish my husband could hurry up and get home!! He is flying in tonight for a few days and then will be back in Arkansas sometime next week. He is making good progress on the project out there, with the help of his 2 other colleagues.

I wanted to share real quick what our wedding was like. We got married in Cliff's hometown of Poultney, VT. I had never been to VT. Cliff had a dream of getting married in the church he attended while he was growing up. So we planned a New England wedding during foliage season, which was for September 19th. The only family member on my side that was able to fly out was my mom and my BFF, Deidre, had moved to the state of NY a few months before our wedding so it was pretty easy for her to get to the wedding, she was my maid of honor and we were childhood best friends.

So here we are 11 years later, with a marriage that keeps on ticking like the Timex watch and we are constantly working on ourselves and having a good marriage. It is never just easy, but then I think it would be boring if it were just easy...KWIM?

Here is a salute to my Darling Husband Cliff....to a great 11 years of marriage and looking forward to a lifetime of many more anniversaries!!

xoxoxoxoxoxo

Date: 18-09-2009