Savannah lost her first tooth tonight

Savannah's bottom tooth was so loose this past week that I knew at any given point it would come out. I was so scared it would come out when she was sleeping and she would choke on it.

After I put everyone to bed tonight, Savannah got out of bed and told me that her loose tooth was bleeding. I check it and the tooth was just hanging.   I knew tonight was the big night for her first tooth to come out.

It was just as big of a night for her as it was for me. I remember when that little tooth first came in. What a huge milestone, my first born baby's tooth that came in is now coming out.   ((sniff, sniff)).

We got lots of pictures and I video taped Savannah pulling her own tooth out of her mouth.   It was such a grown up thing for her to do all by herself.   She was really amazed and wonderous.

I have been talking to her about the tooth fairy. All she could talk about after her tooth came out was that the tooth fairy would be coming tonight!! I have a special little box for her tooth and we put it under her pillow.

I am just so full of tears right now. There is no going back now....everything about my baby is no longer a baby...she is a girl now.
